Technology, Electronic, & Energy, Industrial Technology Industry: Technology, Engineering & Manufacturing History
Parametric was founded in 1985 by John Casasanta, who served as its first president, and it began to evolve its first product lines, being the first company to launch high density printed circuit boards. The company was subsequently acquired by Macro-Data, Inc. In 2000, Macro-Data Inc was acquired by Advanced Technology Inc., which was acquired by TTP, Inc., which was acquired by Crystal International Corp. in July 2004. Since its founding, Parametric has continued to grow its product lines and enter new markets, including becoming a component manufacturer for the computing industry. Parametric's partners, clients, and customers include many of the world's leading manufacturers in computing, consumer electronics, telecommunications, and other end markets. From 1997 to 2004, the company owned and operated a second online web portal, as a beta-test website, called.com-nest.com. In 2005, the site was taken over by another company, and in 2012, the site was shut down. Parametric has the subsidiary Parametric Technology Laboratory (PTL), which is a R&D center located in Needham, Massachusetts. See also
